My son says he has to work much harder at school this year, but he gets to do much more fun things. He says they have more work to do, but if they work hard and get it done they get to do really cool stuff. 2/17/2015 9:49 PM View respondent's answers
When we ask our child about his day this year, he has much more to share with us. In prior years, he would not have much to say and aside from his LEC day, he did not get excited about school. He has grown and benefitted from this program not only academically, but socially as well. 2/17/2015 7:49 PM View respondent's answers
I can't imagine putting my child in a regular classroom next year. This program simply has to continue next year for my child to continue to succeed 2/17/2015 4:58 PM View respondent's answers
I think the program has been very good academically, but not a perfect solution for my child. 2/17/2015 4:11 PM View respondent's answers
Concern over lack of communication among teachers and between teachers and parents. I don't feel like I know what's going on at school like I did before. I also worry that they are skipping things the kids are supposed to learn. 2/17/2015 1:18 PM View respondent's answers

Concerned about gaps within the math curriculum.

Mr. Pollard holds a major part of the teaching commitment, with roles in english, art and music and social studies, and because of this, I believe the students would benefit by having Mr. Pollard fully accessible with less participation in evaluating gifted students. This role takes him away from LEC perhaps too many hours. Hiring another gifted educator/psychologist in the district would help spread out the load of evaluation work.

My son has expressed that he really likes going to the pilot program. He likes the smaller class size as well as the fact of not going over the same lessons for a month. He enjoys the speed of learning at the pilot.

I realize this is year one, but it still seems a little to unstructured. For instance, what happened to the music program? Also, communication about school work on a daily basis is not like what we had been used to with the elem. school & I feel too much responsibility is placed on the student to communicate/remember work.

I feel that although my child has made significant gains in some areas and has been challenged this year, there are other content areas that they have not been challenged. I am concerned that with all the good that has come of the pilot program there are specific areas that need addressed academically.
